"Made in Bangladesh" explores sweatshops through dance

In a novel way, German choreographer Helena Waldmann explores the subject matter of sweatshops and worker exploitation in the apparel industry through a 70minute dance performance called "Made in Bangladesh", using the Indian classical dance form of Kathak. The piece even draws parallels to the "sweat shop" that a regular dance studio can be. Co-choreographed by Kolkata-based Kathak expert Vikram Iyengar, the piece has already had 11 performances in Zurich, Germany and Luxembourg and is currently being performed in India.

The choreographer is also quick to emphasize that she is not out to criticize the garment industry. Read More

The 12 Bangladeshi dancers performing the piece are experienced Kathak dancers, all members of Shadona , a Dance school.
